ANTIQUES (BEFORE 1960)

For educational purposes, please include a description of the item and owner's name (on back) on a 5x8 inch card.

The Danish Evaluation System of judging will be used. Under this system each exhibit is compared to the ideal for that category.

Exhibits will receive either an excellent (Blue), good (Red) or worthy (White) award.

Since each entry is compared to the ideal and not to other entries, there may be multiple placings (Blue, Red, White) awarded in each category.

HOMEMADE SOAP

Cold process soap making is the method most often used by soap makers who make soap from scratch. It's called "cold" process because no additional heat is added during the soap making process, however the process itself does generate heat.

Soaps produced via the cold process method are opaque and usually have a creamy feel to the bar. Without any additives that change the color, the soap ranges from white-white to creamy-tan, depending on the oils used in making the soap.

Cold process soaps will continue to get harder as they age because additional water evaporates out of the soap.

Hot process soap making, uses additional heat in the soap making process. The chemical reaction is the same but occurs faster than in cold process soap making.

Because of the additional heat, the finished soap bar tends to feel smoother to the touch. The hardness of the bar again depends on the selection of oils, amount of water used in the process and length of time allowed for water to evaporate out of the finished bar.

Hot process soap is opaque and ranges from white-white to creamy-tan depending on the oils used, although clear soaps can be produced.
